

Air Raid

Setting 1: Queensferry, a short time ago...

A missile is launched, headed toward central Schulmanicus, in an effort to destroy our capital and end our armed resistance.

The intended target, Wirtyplace, capital of Schulmania and residence of the Supreme Wirdle and Admiral Hestorb, located in the ancient center of Wirt, Schulmanicus.

Setting 2, Devonshire coast, just a few minutes ago...

Schulmania National Air Force reports sighting large incoming craft coming from the east at extreme altitude. No balloons were launched to intercept, as it was too fast and out of range. Destination, unknown. A nationwide alert is now being initiated.

Setting 3, Coastal Schulmanicus, just east of the capital

Amongst the very ancient ruins of fortifications built way back during the time of the Great Tomato Scare, the watch tower has been put back into service.

Here, members of the 103rd Regiment are watching for signs of trouble. And they just now caught a glimpse of trouble heading right toward them.

Adjacent to the ruins sits Fort Wirt, the Supreme Wirdle's weekend getaway home. Here, she can enjoy nature and still be a short commute back to the capital. It is currently vacant, as she is traveling to East Atkinos to dedicate a new military installation.

This peaceful setting of national heritage sites is about to be forever disturbed by the incoming missile from Queensferry. Bent on a quick victory against us, Queensferry has launched a missile toward Wirtyplace, hoping to kill our leaders and break our resolve. Apparently, when programming the missile's trajectory, the Queensferry military input the coordinates for the wrong castle on the island of Schulmanicus. For, instead of hurtling toward the center of the bustling capital, the missile is headed directly toward Fort Wirt.

Fort Wirt has been destroyed and the flaming debris caught the surrounding trees on fire. The ancient ruins have been destroyed. But, the strategic objectives of Queensferry have once again been completely and utterly foiled.