

East Devonshire: Is this an Isthmus?

To the southeast, two lakes near the coast create a series of isthmuses. Sitting astride the interlake isthmus is the settlement of Impudence Lake. The land is steep and the town follows the flow of the land from the hills to the sea. It is the first town to border two bodies of water. If it were to grow more, it would border both lakes and the sea.

Impudence Lake is at right and the salt ocean is on the left.

Impudence Lake and Cape Eastway are the first two ports on the eastern salt ocean. So far, there's just a little fishing boat traffic and some transit between the two.

The land is steep facing the lake.

And equally steep facing the ocean.

Some land is too steep for development.

Which seems to suit the local wildlife quite well.

From City Hall, the terraced, “L”-shaped town is run with great efficiency, thanks in large part to the staff of Mayor Noah Kant Speakwell.

Prosperous businesses rely on coastal commerce and trade from the interior.

The Tantrum Tavern on the corner is a favorite local hangout.

Don't forget to drop in on Argue Inn, the only guesthouse in town, when you come to visit.

Unless, of course, you have family in the area.

Residents enjoy a good standard of living, even here on the edge of the nation.
