

Schulmanicus: Sacred Precinct Expands

The growing nation needs a growing religious center. The administrative side of religion is now handled at Temple Terrace. As the throngs of pilgrims continue to arrive, the Sacred Precinct needs more structures to accommodate them. Two new places have been built. One, at the base of the hill, is a shrine. The Shrine of the Supreme Wirdle is a small structure; a place for pilgrims to gather and reflect on their great and inspired leadership and be thankful for their serene and prosperous realm. And, in tribute to the greater spread of Schulminions around the world, the Church of Colonial Citizens. This offers a place dedicated to serving the friends and families of colonial residents and those contemplating the colonies.

Let's spend a day at the Sacred Precinct and see how the worshippers are doing.

The Thankfulness Shrine still stands as a proud sentinel on the hill. The oldest structure in the temple complex, it still sees its share of thankful worshippers.

After the break of dawn, worshippers file in to the various temples and churches.

Students at the Temple Terrace Monastery often come to learn as well as worship.

One of the new structures, still built in the formal Temple Style of architecture, is the Shrine of the Supreme Wirdle. At the base of the temple complex, this contemplation area serves as a central connecting point for those visiting the Sacred Precinct. The only road to the complex intersects with temple access walkways here.

The shrine, as seen from above

Closer views of the shrine.

The Church of Colonial Citizens is a bustling new structure. A focal point for those in colonial areas or who have families in those areas, this new church has quickly become a favorite for pilgrims.

Many have come to mourn the loss of the Schulmericho expedition lately. This has been a busy church.

Despite the heavy traffic of worshippers and the construction of new temples, the Sacred Precinct has retained its openness and charm. Just outside any temple, one can still get the same awe inspiring views as the first Schulminions did when they established this area.

